instrumentals, sultry ballads, touches of funky humor—and a little number called “Le Freak.”

Built around Rodgers’ stuttering guitar and Edwards’ unstoppable bass, “Le Freak” became one of the disco era’s true anthems. The tune was named after a popular dance at the time, which Rodgers and Martin would demonstrate onstage while performing. Many of those who loved the song had never even seen the dance. Rodgers offers: “Dick Clark once said, ‘This is the biggest dance record, but every time I ask somebody to do The Freak, nobody knows how to do it.’ That’s because he didn’t go to the black community!”

Released in October 1978, “Le Freak” went on to top the Billboard Pop chart for six weeks and the R&B chart for five. The song remains the biggest-selling single ever released by Atlantic. “We actually stopped our sales of ‘Le Freak’ in America. In those days black artists didn’t sell a lot of albums, and that was where the sales counted. So we stopped it at 6,000,000 for fear that we wouldn’t sell any albums. We sold 1,000,000 in Atlanta alone.”

Chic quickly followed up “Le Freak” with “I Want Your Love,” which became a #7 Pop/#5 R&B hit in the spring of ’79. Spiced up by tubular bell chimes and horn accents, this ode to unrequited passion earned the group a gold single. “‘I Want Your Love’ was about a real-life affair I was involved in, where I was going out with one girl, but I wanted to go out with her best friend,” Rodgers confesses.

The year 1979 found Edwards and Rodgers at the peak of their powers. Besides their runaway success with Chic, the duo also wrote and produced Sister Sledge’s Top 10 pop hits “He’s The Greatest Dancer” and “We Are Family.” Despite the respect they received for their musicianship, some critics dismissed Edwards and Rodgers’ work with Chic as dance-floor fluff, empty of ideas. The band’s next single, “Good Times,” was something of a response to these charges. “That song was probably our most ironic composition to date,” says Rodgers. “Someone in an article had attacked us, saying, ‘How come your songs
